About this ebook

Chris Hemsworth's trainer Luke Zocchi has spoken, via Hemsworth's Centr platform, about how the actor ate to bulk up for his hammer-wielding role. Here is what was reported — and how to scale it to a normal life.

This ebook is an independent summary of publicly available interviews and articles. It is not affiliated with, authorised or endorsed by Chris Hemsworth, their trainers, representatives, or any film studio. Names are used only to identify whose publicly reported routine is being described. Every reported fact is paraphrased and numbered to its source on the final page. What was reported

1. Trainer Luke Zocchi said Hemsworth ate around 4,500 calories a day, aiming to be 'the strongest, fittest and healthiest' he had ever been.[1]

2. He ate a meal every 2–3 hours — up to six feeds while at work — then a big dinner after training.[1]

3. Meals were about 450 calories, with 30–40% protein and the rest split equally between carbs and fat.[1]

4. Breakfast varied: scrambled eggs with vegetables and toast one day; steak, salad and potatoes the next.[1]

5. When he couldn't eat another meal, he had a smoothie of almond milk, frozen banana, a tablespoon of peanut butter and two scoops of protein. Zocchi: 'When you think you can't possibly fit another thing in, liquid is your friend.'[1]

6. His stunt double, Bobby Holland Hanton, said they went to bed early for good sleep 'because that's when the muscle magic happens.'[1]

TRAINING NOTES

- The bulk was paired with heavy training and an emphasis on sleep for recovery.

CHAPTER 3

The principles

Strip away the film budget, private chefs and trainers, and the reported approach comes down to a handful of repeatable rules. These are our plain-English take on them:

VALTAIR ADAPTATION

- Eat every 3–4 hours — 4 to 5 feedings.
- Aim for protein in every feeding.
- Use a shake or smoothie when appetite runs out.
- Increase portions gradually; check weight weekly.

PORTION GUIDE (HAND METHOD)

FOOD	PER MEAL
Protein	1–2 palms
Vegetables	1–2 fists
Carbs	1–2 cupped hands
Fats	1–2 thumbs

CHAPTER 6

Read this first: cautions

- 4,500 calories a day suits a large, very active man trying to gain muscle — most people need far less.
- Gaining weight quickly adds fat as well as muscle; a slower surplus is usually wiser outside of film schedules.
- Celebrity transformations are short-term, supervised and often timed to a shoot. Sustainable progress is slower — and that is normal.
- Stop and see a doctor if you feel faint, unwell, or your relationship with food starts to feel stressful.
